I would appreciate seeing it. While acknowledging our legal responsibilities, we may want to reassure the community in some way and to provide avenues through which they can engage with us. But perhaps you have already done so.

I only say this because the 1st thing I learned in my crisis communications class was “don’t let the lawyers dictate your statements.” :)

I spoke with our attorney this afternoon and be assured that we did not break any OML and did not violate freedom of speech. Public Speak is there for any citizen to talk about anything that is happening within the district that is not on the agenda. People can not speak about employees of the public schools or any student. That violates the individual's right to privacy which we need to protect. We have mechanisms and support in place to help any student that needs it. Public Speak is not that Please tell anyone that approaches you individual about this that SC can not talk about personnel or students issue in public. Assure them that we have the appropriate supports in place to help all of your students if needed. You can also direct them to speak with administration if needed.

Hi Peter - I wanted to take this opportunity to share the success of our Document Based Question professional development.

For three years, a group of educators from Wilson and Kennedy Middle Schools have been involved in a study of "next steps in writing" for 21st century students. With Anna Nolin's guidance, teachers explored options and ultimately, pursued training with The DBQ Project based in Chicago, Illinois.

Today concluded nine hours of training for all Language & Literacy, Social Studies and affiliated Special Educators in the district. In my twenty years in the district, I have never experienced such comprehensive and thoughtful professional development. With the support, endorsement and encouragement of our Assistant Superintendent for Curriculum, we have taken great strides towards implementation of a writing program focused on achieving the district goal of cross-curriculum writing with consistent language, strategy and research standards in place. With Anna's educational leadership and understanding of changing demands and challenges in education, we are poised to meet the needs of all learners in grades 5-8 in our middle schools. This conceptual and instructional plan developed by Central Administration supports goals around Project Based Learning and rigor in the classroom as well as meeting learning standards across our curriculum.

I encourage you to follow-up with building level leadership to visit classrooms and observe the DBQ Project in action. Thank you for your continued support.

I was unable to go to this meeting but watched the video. I found the behavior very troubling of the Superintendent and the Committee. The situation was obviously emotional but the fact that this woman felt she needed to use the time of public speaking brings up the question what is the issue that drove this confrontation? If she was in the audience, the committee and school officials should have managed this better before the meeting. I understand legal matters are meant to be kept private, but the response was uncalled for in this situation. I ask for an explanation and who is running the school committee? The Superintendent or the chair/committee?

There is talk on the Natick Mom's FB page about the situation from Monday night. Someone has suggested letting the news stations know. I'm not suggesting we respond to any of this on FB. But, the district and SC may want to have a statement prepared in the event that we are contacted.
